

Would you like to apply your anthropological skills and gain academic credit?

If so, then the fourth year ANTH 4130 6.0 The Professional Anthropologist Work-Study Placement course is for you.

This year-long course offers you the opportunity to conduct research and/or volunteer with a range of host organizations such as NGOs, hospitals, immigration agencies, homeless shelters, corporations and other service organizations that are approved by the department of Anthropology.

You will engage in experiential learning and community-engaged research under the guidance of a course director. You are required to identify issues that you intend to explore during your placement before starting the experiential learning opportunity.

- The placement must include at least 100 hours of work or volunteer activities over the academic year.
- Assessment will include:
 - weekly communication via the blog site (shared journaling);
 - a research paper;
 - a final community report

Registration for this course requires the permission of the instructor and an approved placement site. Spots will be reserved for students who are enrolled in the Advocacy and Public Engagement Minor or Certificate program. An open interview will be conducted before Fall online registration begins. This course is restricted to third and fourth-year Anthropology students who have completed ANTH 3110 6.0.
